About This Game

In Martha Madison: Optics, players explore an ancient temple in search of instructions for building a microscope. Players solve challenges based on topics such as reflection, refraction, concave and convex lenses. Explore the free-play optics playground and create new playable levels in the game. Just like real-life scientists, you can work alone or collaboratively to experiment with different approaches. Players are free to make mistakes and try different paths.

Martha Madison: Optics is part of a series of games designed from the ground up to enhance middle school-level science curriculum by captivating players and making complex concepts meaningful. All of the games in the Martha Madison series allow players to cooperatively solve real-world challenges that develop critical thinking, problem solving, technology literacy and adaptability.

Game Features:

- Single Player and Couch Co-Op Support
- Co-Op Keyboard Support (both players can play on a single keyboard)
- A level editor to build and play your own Optics-based levels

English

That lens is convex, meaning its surface curves outward. Notice how it refracts the light compared to the concave lens above.

I need to be able to take a closer look at the plants to figure out how to help them grow. The convex lens in this magnifying glass enlarges the image of whatever is placed underneath it.
